Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurAlien invasion. Evolve or die.Nothing could prepare Tabitha Jones for the dead infested world she woke up to.Robbed of her loved ones and altered by the venom of an alien species, she's forced to leave her old life behind and survive the ruins of Earth. Pursued relentlessly by monstrous swarms and desperate survivors, she faces a changing post-apocalyptic world and her own ever-evolving abilities as she searches for the remnants of civilisation.But as humanity turns on her, and the alien threat hunts their hybrid creation ever more obsessively, Tabitha comes to realise that there's only one side left to fight for her own.Mastering her new electrical nature, she learns to control a living alien weapon and begins to carve her own path in a violent overgrown world. Where that path will lead her though, not even she can know...What the readers say:"Exquisite... I loved this book." "I have read the masters of SF. And with a doubt if this author never writes again, this book will still stand with them." "This is one of the best reads I've had in a very, very long time." "Marvellous! I stayed up all night to finish this book!" Kick-ass heroine and aliens that will shock you... one of the most original sci-fi books I've read in some time. Combines a lot of genres but does it in such a way that sucks you into the world very excited to see what happens next. "An amazing read: a seamless blend of sci-fi, post-apocalypse and survival. There have been precious few books I've been unable to put down, and this is one of them." "The best sci-fi and alien story I've read, can't wait for a sequel." SampleShe didnt make out its shape at first. It was only when it drooled glowing molten metal as it fed that she noticed it, sprawled out and gripping close to the side of a city tram, like it was making love to it. Its molten slather beaded and slopped from its mouth and hit the wet road in a hissing cloud of steam. Its white eyes stared at the sky, unblinking, while it shredded sheet metal and devoured it with grinding black jaws. Everything about it was black and heaving. The monster swallowed its mouthful of molten metal so loudly that Tabitha heard it up the road. Some kind of exhaust jutted out of its back then; a glowing growth that hissed and sighed a huge jet of steam. The monsters rubbery black metal body gleamed in the rain and the grey daylight, dripping and hulking as it dropped down to the road and rested. Suddenly its head snapped around in her direction, white eyes staring. Terrified, Tabitha had hidden behind a half-eaten taxi. Its bodywork was covered in messy welding where the creature had bitten and slobbered. She peered around from the wheel arch, looking through the doorless back door, through the taxis torn-open front, to where the alien stood in the distance. It hadnt moved; it hadnt turned its head. It was just staring in the rain, eyes glowing cold, watching down the road for any sign of the intruder. Tabitha didnt dare breathe. Discover a new kind of superhero.
